* * * William Lewis, the celebrated Chess writer, was a pupil of Sarratt's, and Chess preceptor of M'Donnell, the competitor of La Bourdonnais, etc. This gentleman and Mr. Sarratt may be looked upon as chess professors. “It is difficult, from the paucity of existing data, to judge of the strength of former players,” when in their zenith, “as compared with modern examples.” Mr. Lewis for some time gave his pupil M'Donnell pawn and move. In his best time the latter would, however, have been a formidable opponent to any player in the world.

By George Walker. Medium 8vo, 10s. 6d., sewed.

* * " This collection of specimens of chess skill is unique, and forms a complete encyclopædia of reference to the student and player. It contains upwards of 1000 games, all of them the classical exploits of the best chess warriors of the age. Every student and lover of the fascinating game should possess himself of Mr. Walker's book."—Examiner.

" The lovers of chess owe large obligations to Mr. Walker. His publications are all valuable, and equally distinguished by clearness and brevity. His enthusiasm on chess is delightful. Mr. Walker's notes are always to the purpose. He breaks new ground in chess, by dismissing in some manner the formal conventional style in which previous chess authors wrote, and adopts a more pleasant manner of communicating instruction. As a fireside companion in the country, or by the hearth of a road-side inn on a pelting wet day, his book would be a real treasure, and in packing the portmanteau for our annual run in July deeply do we vow to remember its merits."—*Metrop.
